Sir Michael Arthur, President of Boeing Europe and Managing Director Boeing UK & Ireland will talk at the Aviation Club UK about the important, growing role the UK will play in the company's next 100 years as it celebrates its centenary in July.

He will speak at a luncheon on Thursday 6 July at the Institute of Directors in Pall Mall, London just days before representatives of the world's aerospace industry come together at the Farnborough International Airshow (11-17 July). As the company plans for its second century and grows its UK footprint, Sir Michael will discuss the need to invest in research and skills to ensure the ongoing success of the British aerospace sector.

Jane Johnston, chairman of the Aviation Club said: "Boeing is an iconic part of the history of aviation and the UK has featured prominently in that story. Our members look forward to hearing of Boeing's plans for the next 100 years and what this means for our country."
